My name is Renee and I am teaching English in Africa for one year, before I start university. I live in a small village and I have my own little hut. I get up at 6 a.m. every day. I have a 'shower' using a bucket of cold water. I eat a quick breakfast, and then I get on my motorbike and ride to school through the jungle.

When I get to school, the kids are all waiting. Everyone is wearing T-shirts, shorts, and trainers – it's very hot! Today I'm teaching the younger children some English. We are studying numbers 1–10, colours, days of the week, and we're reading a story about a family of rabbits. Incredible things happen to them! The other teacher, Zac, is teaching the older children. They are studying maths today. My class are laughing and telling stories in their own language. Zac's class aren't making so much noise. They're studying hard!

In the evenings, I usually eat supper early – around 6 p.m. Then I relax and watch the sunset. And very often I go to bed early. Teaching is very tiring!

Soho is in the West End of London, right in the centre, and includes Piccadilly Circus, Shaftesbury Avenue and Leicester Square. Why do people like so much this part of town? Soho is always lively and colourful, with people dashing around, going about their business, which is mainly honest but not always. Some of the streets may be a bit shabby but life in Soho is never dull. There's a surprise round every corner – maybe a brand-new night club that wasn't there last week, a snoring down-and-out sleeping in a doorway, or a celebrity being pursued by paparazzi and fans. A sense of history pervades Soho. The name is derived from a hunting call, "So-ho", that huntsmen were heard to cry as they chased deer in what were the royal parklands. It has been a cosmopolitan area since the first immigrants, who were French Huguenots, arrived in the 1680s. They were followed by Germans, Russians, Poles, Greeks, and Italians. More recently there have been a lot of Chinese from Hong Kong. Gerrard Street, which is pedestrianized, is the centre of London's Chinatown, and buzzes all year round, but especially at the New Year celebration in February. Many famous people lived in Soho, including Mozart, Karl Marx, and the poet T.Eliot. Soho has a reputation for attracting artists, writers, poets, musicians, and people in the media. Shaftesbury Avenue is in the heart of London's theatre and there are endless clubs, pubs, trendy boutiques, and of course, restaurants. Soho is a genuine 24/7 part of town. Piccadilly Circus is like a magnet for young people. They flock from every corner of the world to sit on the steps under the statue of Eros, celebrating the freedom and friendship of youth. They say that if you wait long enough at Piccadilly Circus, you'll meet everyone you've ever known!
